Part III: Agency - General

1. How and why did you enlist with the Agency?

I had been working in OSINT analysis for a private contractor called [REDACTED]. In my research, I kept finding references to an entity known as [REDACTED]. It wasn't long until I heard from an Agency recruiter with an offer. Naturally, once I learned the true nature of the Agency (and the threats it fights), I knew I had to enlist.

2. What were your experiences as a new recruit? How do they affect your relationships with new recruits today?

It was a bit of a stressful transition. Working in the private contracting sector, you never felt as great of a sense of grave importance in preparing your deliverables. Fortunately, I've found that the agents of Division 79 are extraordinarily helpful. I always keep an eye out for opportunities to assist new agents, paying forward what I received.

3. What is your opinion of the weapons and/or equipment that you have been provided thus far?

I have to admit, I haven't gotten much opportunity to make use of most of the arsenal available. Analysis doesn't require too many bullets, but I still make sure to get my range time in. As far as equipment is concerned, I have been blown away by the Agency's ability to acquire any necessary artifacts, grimoires, and totems.

4. Which, if any, additional weapons and/or equipment would you like to see made available in the future?

I would love to see increased development into our mental defensive systems. I've seen too many agents taken out by concentrated psionic attacks for me to feel safe in my mind. I would love to have more confidence in our boys in Parapsychological Research, but I've found the field results lacking.

5. Describe your relationship with HQ:

Group of unknowns who give my orders. I don't do anything to disturb operational processes, and they make sure that I have everything I must have to guarantee operational success. Honestly, I cannot be worried about what HQ is up to, I do my duty. They have never stopped when the world is in danger, and neither do I.

PART IV: Agency - In the Field

1. Describe your first experience in the field, and your reaction to that experience:

I thought I was more ready than I actually was. I was attached as a field analyst on [REDACTED]. I thought I would just be kept in the background, safe in one of our desert field tents. There are no words to describe that feeling, living a life of faith and seeing an ifrit for the first time. I still work on reconciling my faith and my work life.

2. Describe your last active mission, and how your participation actively contributed to the mission's success:

[REDACTED] and I were tasked to establish operations in [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] Were managed to track down an influential shaman, but found him possessed by a malevolent spirit. Fortunately, I was able to perform a field exorcism myself, earning the trust of the shaman immediately.

3. Have you ever been wounded in the field? If yes, describe the experience, and how you plan to avoid it in the future:

I recently spent 336 hours in a coma following unprotected exposure to a crypto-cyber entity. I'm still dealing with residual headaches and paranoia. I've learned the hard way that I need to wait for physical protective instructions to arrive from NITE Team 4 before I open any networked communications on crypto-cyber assignments.

4. Have you ever lost a fellow agent in the field? If yes, describe the experience, and how you plan to avoid it in the future:

It's a great personal shame of mine, but I was assigned to provide support for [REDACTED]. I got into a heated debate with [REDACTED] about whether mind reading should be categorized as HUMINT or SIGINT. In our debate, we neglected our surveillance and a cryptid got the drop on our field team. I will never allow myself to engage in unprofessional conduct while on duty again.

5. Describe your preferred methods when dealing with local authorities and/or military personnel. How do you avoid detection and engagement?

An old trick I picked up from my days as a missionary, I've found that pretending to be canvassing works wonders for hiding in plain sight. Once people hear the words "do you have a minute to talk about..." you suddenly become invisible.

6. Describe your most recent experience in information gathering (reconnaissance, hacking, subject interrogation, etc):

In my most recent collection operation, I was tasked with conducting an interview using non-coercive methods. In preparing the room prior to the interview, I made sure to acquire a comfortable, moving chair. The subject unintentionally used the freedom of movement and gave away their deception through more pronounced anchor point shifts.

Part V: Agency - Green Level

1. Beyond your agency training, what special skills can you offer the agency?

As has come up in many agency reports, I bring with my analytical skills, the benefits of religious specialist. It is very useful in a time critical operation to be able to eliminate the need to wait for a specialist to arrive. Additionally, my language capacity enhances my ability to pull research from a broader array of sources.

2. Why do you deserve Green Level clearance?

I owe it to every agent that I support to give them the most accurate intelligence and analysis possible. Too often, I have given flawless support, only to find that the realities of the field work did not square with the resources I had to work with, and casualties are always a result of that gap. If I am to serve this organization, and the men and women who give so much to it, I need to be unimpeded by the words "above your clearance". Do you know how many agents I have had see put in the ground? Fifteen. I'd name them all, too, but this isn't the place for such memorials. This is the place where I petition for the training that will prevent me from having to bury another friend. I cannot in good faith ask the agents I support to trust me if I cannot prove to them that I know their situation and I deserve their trust. I deserve this because the Agency deserves my best, and I cannot provide that where I am now.
